About the Show

A romantic dramedy that follows two lesbian therapists as they struggle to keep up the pretense of their own marriage after the success of their book “How To Succeed In Marriage Without Even Trying.”

Ultra-sleek, intellectual Dyna (DeBuono) and the quirky, emotional Kit (Bennett) gain insights into their own relationship (when they’re actually listening) — in their sessions with their own therapist, Susan, played by the charming and hilarious Suzanne Westenhoefer.

Things get complicated when Kit’s stoner, and potentially bisexual, sister Cindy (Noble), moves in after being evicted yet again. To make matters worse, a documentary film director (McLaughlin) starts filming every single moment of Dyna and Kit’s home life, meaning no one’s secrets are safe.

Tired of bemoaning the lack of quality roles for women and the dearth of lesbian entertainment, DynaKit Productions was formed in December 2008 with the goal of addressing both issues.

After a small but successful launch of Season 1, the women moved forward to Season 2 with a subscription based model in mind; no independently produced web series to date had been able to continue without a revenue stream in place.

This year, they added an affiliate program, in hopes of partnering with other LGBT sites. They are also exploring the more traditional distribution route by offering Season 2 as a feature film in both LGBT festivals and for sale as a DVD.
